

What special needs homeschooling parents are looking for on your website/in your program

Peggy Ployhar, SPED Homeschool Founder & CEO - peggy.ployhar@spedhomeschool.com

State Organizations

Your state homeschooling law, specific to special needs student, written in easy to read laymen's terms.

How joining your organization will help their student and their family in homeschooling their special needs learner.

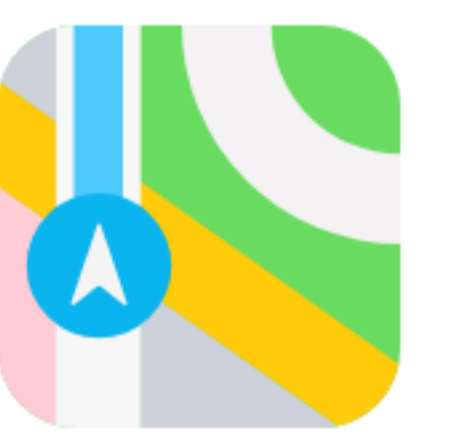

What specifically they need to do for reporting, record keeping, testing and tracking student progress.

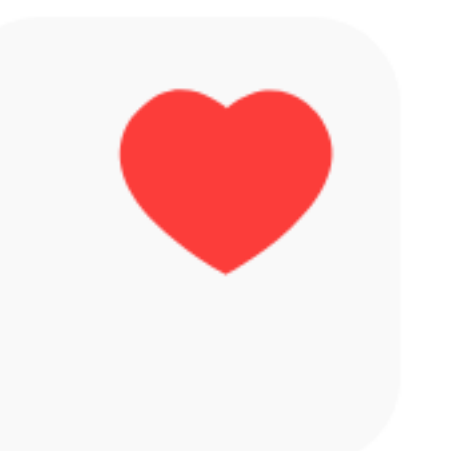

Where they can find curriculum options that work for teaching a student with special needs.

What therapy options are available to them, if any, through the public schools, grant or scholarship programs, or other organizations in your state.

A list of support, field trips, and learning groups that accommodate special needs families.

Encouragement from other special needs homeschooling families. Quotes, testimonials, and stories.

A step-by-step guide on how to get started homeschooling a special needs student.

How to tap into ongoing special needs homeschooling support, encouragement, and resources.

Local Organizations

Your group policies and openness to work with special needs families.

What ways your group can and can't accommodate special needs students.

Your willingness to learn and walk alongside these families with love.

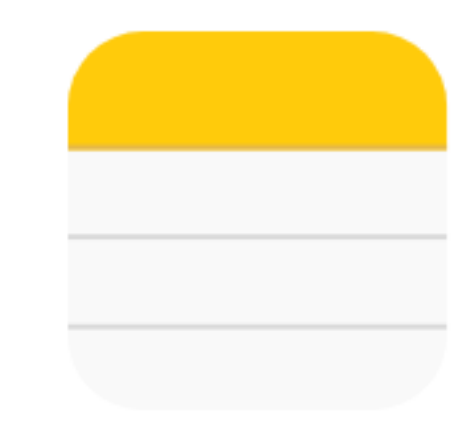

Resources your group uses and available accommodations.

Other local resources helpful to special needs homeschooling families.

Information about your facility and its accessibility.

Additional resources, like SPED Homeschool, that special needs homeschooling families may find helpful.

